7.3 BEST PRACTICES

(A) Title of the Practice: Conferences

Goal:

Present working professionals are faced with multiple environment dependent problems, for which most optimal solutions have to be found out by them. This calls for problem defining, research on various aspects, identification of alternative options, analysis and zeroing on to best solution. Very frequently, they have to share their findings to get the approvals from their superiors and team mate; before successful implementation. Considering this professional requirement, Institute endeavors to train the managers of tomorrow by exposing them to International and National Conferences every year.

The Context:

Academic gatherings are critical to the creation of knowledge. Research, teaching and service do not take place in isolation; rather every field of knowledge is enhanced by the interactions of academics studying similar, related or even different things in different places. When the students and investigators from various field come together and talk about what they have learned there is tremendous potential for leaps in knowledge and understanding. Academic conferences range in size from small with a very specific focus, to very large with a broader range of fields of study and issues. Preparing for such gatherings is extremely time intensive and requires some experience and a collaborative effort among many individuals. Involvement of the students in such activities helps them to expand their thinking and get involved in participating in the behind the scenes work from the outset of their careers. Starting small and taking on gradually more responsibility is expected of students or managers of tomorrow. The knowledge acquisition and connections made with specialists from various fields, more than compensates for the time it takes to get involved. With this premise in view, Institute endeavors to promote this initiative amongst students as part of their career development.

The Practice:

Institute organizes one International conference and three national conferences (one each in the field of management, IT and Mass Communication) every year. Students are encouraged to participate actively and present their research work. They get an opportunity to benchmark their work against the professionals from academics and corporate. This initiative from the Institute motivates large number of the students to participate. An expert panel is organized, who review the work of the students during the preliminaries and selected research papers are selected for presentations by the students during technical sessions. Panel of judges, evaluates these selected presentations and best three presenters are awarded cash prizes.

Evidence of Success:

a. Institute has conducted so far 11 nos. of International Conferences and 28 nos. of National Conferences on varied subjects related to vide range of social and professional issues of national and global importance.

b. Live experience offered to the students and their active participation prepares them to successfully face the real life situations in their career. Of late, we are finding that as much as 5% of the students are registering themselves, as paper presenters.

Problems Encountered and Resources Required:

a. Quality of the Research papers presented by the students needs improvement. This is understandable due to the fact that students are still being trained in research methodologies and solution finding techniques.

b. Conduct of conferences are integral part of co-curricular activities and also are very important part of Research and Development function, additional focus for extending this activity does not involve any special resource investment.
