Students interact with community members and understanding the ground reality

Participants organized community-wide open conversations and debates to address widespread gender stereotypes and biases.

Understanding gender diversity, consent, gender roles, and battling prejudice were among the topics discussed. To better understand the experiences of people of different genders, students were urged to put themselves in the shoes of others. These discussions allowed community members to share their experiences and viewpoints. This peer-led initiative contributed to the community's long-term success.

Nangli Puna's Gender-Related Issues Awareness Campaign has achieved considerable progress in promoting gender equality, fighting prejudices, and creating a more inclusive community.

By providing individuals with knowledge and resources to advocate for change, the campaign has established the framework for continuous progress towards a more equal society.
