Political Bazaar Editor say; 'we are among those pen workers who have dedicated two to three decades of our professional lives toiling away in the media outlets owned by influential businessmen across the country. Today, as we celebrate Labour Day, we find ourselves reflecting on our roles and responsibilities. For years, we've operated under the illusion that we are journalists—the true well-wishers of the public and the voice of suffering humanity. However, upon self-review, embarrassment sets in'.
